

SPENCER HOUSE

Spencer House is one of the last surviving great eighteenth-century town houses in London, and retains all the grandeur of an aristocratic private palace. It stands in a quiet street in the heart of St James's, a short distance from St James's Palace, Buckingham Palace and the Palace of Westminster, and has a splendid terrace and garden overlooking Green Park.

Spencer House is a masterpiece of neo-classical design, built for the 1st Earl Spencer in 1756-66. The State Rooms have recently been restored to their former splendour, and are now decorated with distinguished paintings and furniture, some generously loaned from public and private collections, providing a unique setting for a limited number of events each year.

Each client has the exclusive use of the State Rooms, which can readily accommodate smaller or larger luncheons, dinners, receptions and meetings. They also provide an elegant backdrop for wedding receptions, musical evenings, lectures and press presentations. Security is of the highest standard as the house is sometimes used for government entertainments and international summits.

Our kitchens are staffed by expert chefs, who will devise each menu to suit the host's requirements. Spencer House is able to provide a complete service for all events: we can arrange printing of invitations and menu cards, and will organise flowers, music or other entertainments if required.

The Ante Room where guests may be received at a drinks party or before luncheon or dinner

The Library opens onto a large terrace and garden overlooking Green Park

The Dining Room is the finest room on the ground floor and makes an excellent setting for receptions, luncheons and dinners

The Palm Room provides a unique climax to the ground floor State Rooms

The Music Room may be used for small luncheons and dinners or as a meeting room

Lady Spencer's Room is the first of the three great reception rooms overlooking Green Park

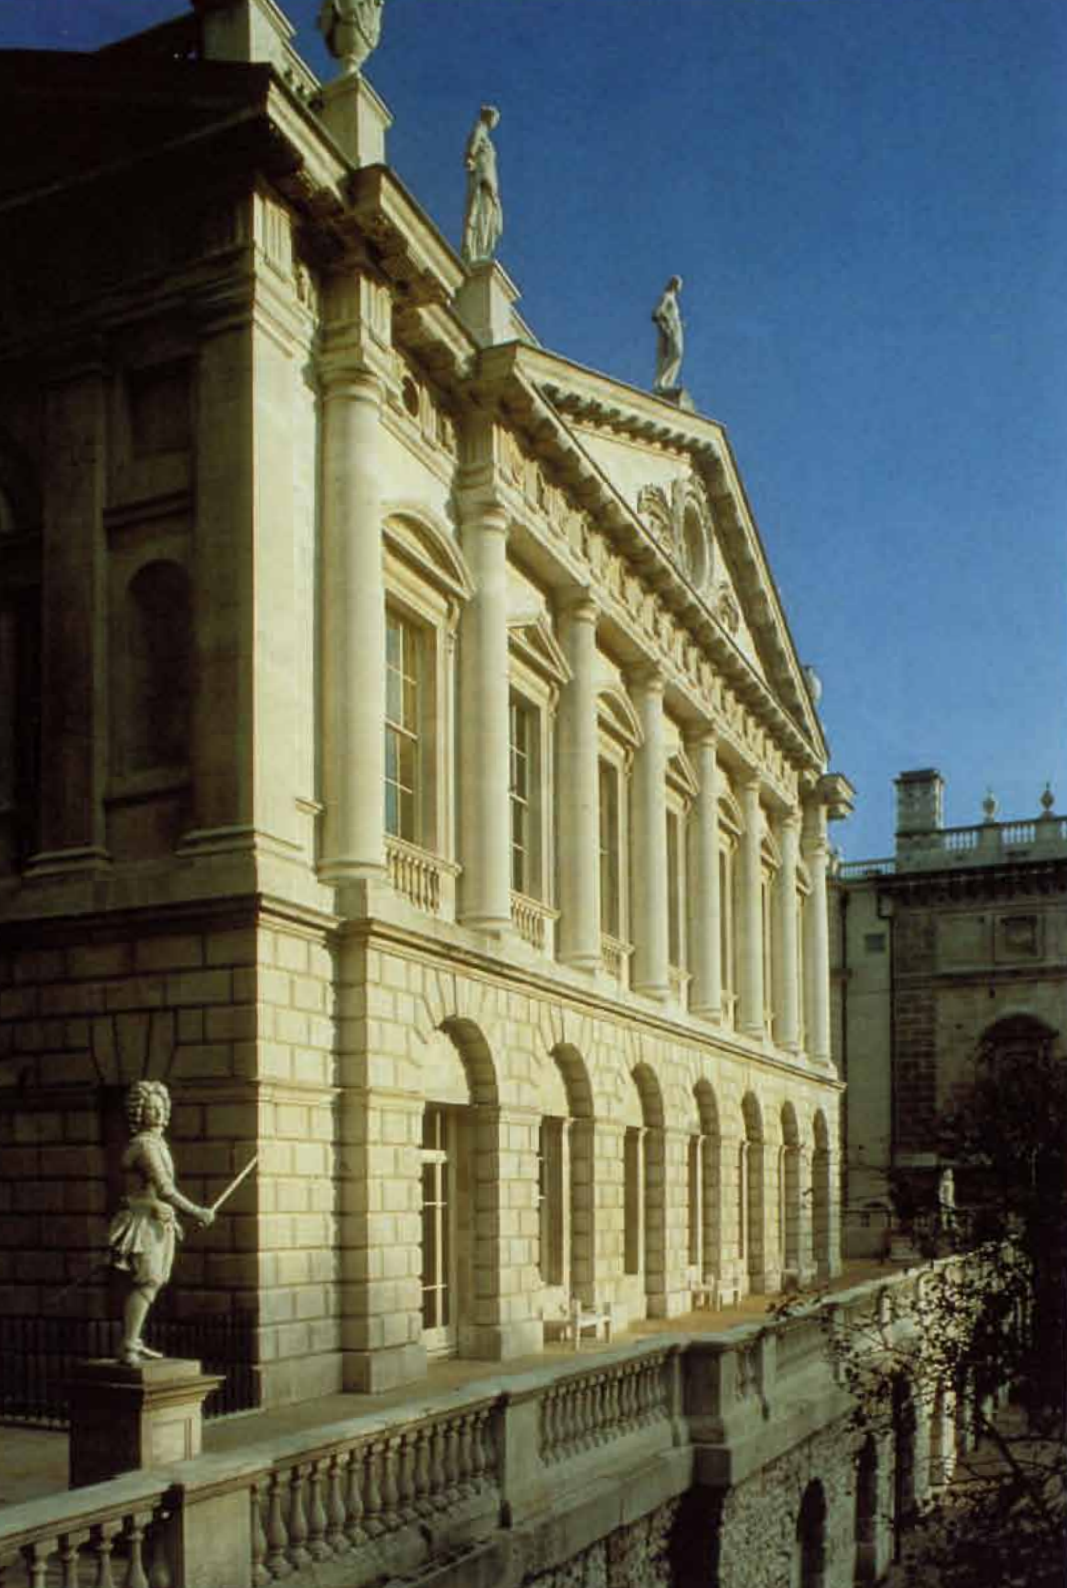

The Great Room is one of the most spectacular reception rooms in London. It is often used in conjunction with both the Music Room and Lady Spencer's Room for larger dinners, and is an ideal setting for concerts or chamber performances of opera

The Painted Room, adjoining the Great Room, is one of the great glories of English decorative architecture

The Terrace and Garden, overlooking The Green Park, may be used in conjunction with the State Rooms for summer receptions

Four State Rooms are licensed for civil weddings
